

Baptist Joint Committee Fellows Program

2017 Seminar: July 26-30
Colonial Williamsburg

Gain skills and knowledge to defend and extend religious liberty for all

The Baptist Joint Committee Fellows Program offers young professionals the opportunity to deepen their historical, theological and legal understanding of religious liberty and develop skills to advocate for the cause throughout their careers.

Ten Baptist Joint Committee Fellows will be selected to attend the BJC Fellows Seminar — a four-day intensive education program at Colonial Williamsburg, where they will learn about religious liberty from BJC staff members and other church-state experts.

After completion of the seminar, the BJC Fellows will serve as liaisons between the BJC and their communities, and they will be expected to use their skills for public engagement, such as leading educational sessions, writing op-eds and using social media to advance the cause of religious liberty.

How to apply:

Requirements:

The program is open to individuals from diverse educational, cultural and professional backgrounds. There is no religious requirement. Applicants must have less than six years of experience in their current profession, and they must commit to be an advocate for religious liberty.

Application process:

Those interested should submit a cover letter, CV or resume, responses to a short questionnaire and two letters of recommendation. To download all of the application materials and view details on the process, visit BJCOnline.org/Fellows after Dec. 1, 2016. Applications must be postmarked by Feb. 17, 2017.

The BJC Fellows Program covers most travel costs, lodging and meals.
